Price Tower Considered for World Heritage List Nomination

Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar announced on July 13th that he will propose the prehistoric earthworks of Poverty Point in Louisiana and a collection of Frank Lloyd Wright buildings to be considered as U.S. nominations for the United Nations World Heritage List.

The list, administered by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, recognizes cultural and natural sites of universal importance such as the Grand Canyon in Arizona, the Taj Mahal in India, and the Great Barrier Reef in Australia.

"World Heritage Sites are unique places of natural beauty and historic and cultural importance that are celebrated by people of all nations," Salazar said. "The remarkable prehistoric earthworks of Poverty Point connect us to those who inhabited our land thousands of years ago, while the buildings of Frank Lloyd Wright are a testament to one of the world's foremost architectural geniuses. They deserve to be recognized as World Heritage Sites."

Eleven iconic, intact, innovative, and influential Frank Lloyd Wright (1867-1959) properties were selected to represent his portfolio of more than 400 buildings. They span almost 60 years of his efforts to create an organic architecture that attracted widespread international attention and powerfully affected the course of modern architecture around the world, as well as in the United States.

The National Park Service manages all or part of 17 of the 21 existing World Heritage Sites in the United States, and is the principal government agency responsible for implementing the World Heritage Convention, in cooperation with the Department of the Interior and the Department of State.

Virtual HP EXPO Available

Did you miss Historic Preservation EXPO: Supporting Sustainable, Livable Communities held at Oklahoma City's Cox Convention Center August 19-20? If you did, you still have an opportunity to attend the virtual version of the trade show. Access information about exhibitors; presentations and demonstrations delivered by Don Rypkema, nationally known consultant in the economic impacts of historic preservation; Bob Yapp, highly respected expert on wood window repair and many other restoration/rehabilitation topics; and other speakers. For the next year, just visit <http://www.preservationexpo.com>.

As the HP EXPO promotional materials said, historic preservation was "green" before green was cool. Not only is it good for the environment, but historic preservation results in quality living space and exciting places for work and play; protects your property values; ensures that your community retains its unique character; attracts heritage tourism dollars; provides tax incentives for redevelopment; and connects our past with the future.

Whether you just want to do the right kind of maintenance on your historic or older house, are rehabilitating a commercial building, need to comply with local design guidelines, or must satisfy requirements of a federal grant program, you are engaged in historic preservation. The virtual HP EXPO has something for you. Find a source for wood window repair/replacement, connect with design professionals, learn about making your house or commercial building more energy efficient, and much, much more.

Rehab Tax Credits Under Review

Passed into law earlier this year, HB1285 created the Task Force for the Study of Tax Credits and Economic Incentives in Oklahoma. One of the first such programs to be considered was the historic building rehabilitation tax credit.

Preservation and community revitalization efforts across the state got a real boost in 2005 with passage of Senate Bill 435. It included numerous tax reduction and incentives programs, including a provision that expanded the rehabilitation tax credits established under the Local Development Act. As a result, the State tax credit:

- Parallels exactly the 20% federal investment tax credit for the rehabilitation of historic buildings used for income producing purposes (including use for rental residential) by eliminating the limitation to historic hotels and newspaper plants originally contained in the Act, and

- Provided a state tax credit equal to the 10% federal tax credit for renovation of older buildings that do not qualify for the 20% federal credit and that will be used for an income producing purpose (other than rental residential).

The first meeting of the task force took place on July 15, 2011, and drew a standing-room-only crowd to the State Capitol committee room. The Task Force asked questions about how the tax credits are administered, what safeguards are in place to ensure the projects are done correctly, and how the financial side of using the tax credits works for developers and investors.

Present at the meeting were numerous property owners, investors, business leaders associated with tax credit projects, and community revitalization and preservation advocates. Dr. Bob Blackburn, Executive Director of the Oklahoma Historical Society and the Oklahoma State Historic Preservation Officer, talked about the importance of the rehabilitation tax credits and answered questions from the Task Force. Other speakers cited the impact of the rehabilitation of once-abandoned buildings as being not only good for the preservation of Oklahoma's history and architectural heritage, but as an economic engine for entire communities across the state, from small Main Street communities to larger urban areas.

To qualify for the 20% credit, the project work must meet the Secretary of the Interior's Standards for Rehabilitation. Through an application submitted to the SHPO for review and transmittal to the National Park Service, the developer receives preliminary approval of the proposed work and then final certification upon project completion.

Over the last five years, more than 20 properties across the state have been successfully rehabilitated utilizing the 20% tax credit, including the Mayo Hotel in Tulsa, the Skirvin Hotel in Oklahoma City, and the Wells Building in Sapulpa. Investors in these and many other redevelopment projects have said that these would not have been possible without the tax incentives. Each project has returned a vacant or underutilized building to a modern, productive use, created jobs, and stimulated other development activity.

To learn more about the state tax incentives for rehabilitation and to follow the results of the Task Force's work, contact Preservation Oklahoma at 405/525-5325 or at preservationok@preservationok.org.

Architectural Poker Run

On October 15th, the Oklahoma City Foundation for Architecture and Preservation Oklahoma will host a Poker Run with a route designed to feature architecturally significant buildings within the Oklahoma City area.

Ride your motorcycle (or car) along the route, and at each stop you'll draw a card from a deck to create your "poker hand" - prizes awarded for the best (and worst) hand! This event's route will feature historic sites and incorporates scenic drive time along Route 66.

To learn more or register for the event, contact Preservation Oklahoma at 405/525-5325 or visit www.okcarchitecture.com.

SHPO Accepting Award Nominations

The State Historic Preservation Office (SHPO), Oklahoma Historical Society, is now accepting nominations for its 2012 awards program. Know someone who rehabilitated an important historic building in your community? Protects an important archeological site located on their property? Worked with a dedicated group of volunteers to save an endangered historic landmark? Developed a walking tour brochure for a historic district? These and many more projects and activities contribute to the preservation of Oklahoma's heritage. Help the SHPO recognize the many preservation success stories across the state.

The SHPO's awards program includes the Shirk Memorial Award for Historic Preservation and the SHPO's Citation of Merit. The deadline for nominations is 5:00pm, Friday, December 2nd, and candidates will be notified in February 2012 about the results of the selection process. The awards will be presented at the banquet during Oklahoma's 24th Annual Statewide Preservation Conference in Tahlequah (June 6-8, 2012).

The Shirk Memorial Award for Historic Preservation is presented for historic preservation programs or activities that have had statewide impact. The SHPO's Citation of Merit is awarded for noteworthy accomplishments in historic preservation at the state or local level.

The SHPO will accept nominations in either electronic or hard copy format. To request nomination forms and instructions, contact Betty Harris at 405/521-6249 or bharris@okhistory.org. Or, obtain the information from the SHPO's website at <http://www.okhistory.org/shpo/shpoawards.htm>.

Platt National Park Designated NHL

Black Sulphur Springs Pavilion Photograph: OK SHPO

On July 27, 2011, Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar announced the designation of four new National Historic Landmarks (NHLs) in four states, including North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, and Pennsylvania. These new listings will join approximately 2,500 other sites in the National Historic Landmark Program," said National Park Service Director Jonathan B. Jarvis. "These places showcase our rich and complex history – from prehistoric time right up to the modern era."

The newly designated NHL in Oklahoma is the Platt National Park Historic District in the Chickasaw National Recreation Area near Sulphur. Platt National Park is nationally significant for its tangible representation of the federal policies in conservation, outdoor recreation and national resource planning central to the Federal Government's response to the Great Depression under President Franklin D. Roosevelt. It is a highly illustrative example of the Civilian Conservation Corps program exhibiting the design principles and practices of landscape design that were formulated by NPS designers in the early twentieth century and, in the 1930s, became the hallmark of CCC work in national, state and local parks. Platt National Park reflects one of the most cohesive and intensive master planning and landscape conservation initiatives carried out in the national parks.

The National Historic Sites Act of 1935 established the NHL program and authorized the Secretary of the Interior to administer it. The purpose of the program is to recognize the buildings, sites, and objects that represent the prehistory and history of the United States and to encourage their long-range preservation. The Secretary identifies places for study, assesses their national significance, and with the advice of the National Park System Advisory Board, designates eligible properties as NHLs.

If designated, property ownership remains intact but each site receives a designation letter, a plaque, and technical preservation advice. Each NHL is automatically entered in the National Register of Historic Places. Additional information on the designations can be found at

POK, SHPO to Host Route 66 Workshop in Bethany, OK

Preservation Oklahoma, Inc. and the Oklahoma State Historic Preservation Office will once again host a workshop entitled Making the Most of the Mother Road: How to Care for (and Benefit from) Your Route 66 Resources.

Route 66 is a national treasure and an important asset to the many communities it touches across the state. The workshop will focus on tools and resources for the preservation, revitalization, and promotion of Route 66 resources and communities. Many useful programs specifically focus on the preservation of the character of this historic road across the country, and this workshop will help communities and individuals tap into those programs. It will also introduce other non-Route 66 specific resources for individual property owners, groups, and communities to utilize as they care for their historic places.

The workshop will be held Saturday, November 19, 2011, in Bethany on the campus of Southern Nazarene University along Historic Route 66. While the focus is on Route 66 communities, anyone interested is welcome to attend! For more information about how to register for the workshop, please contact Preservation Oklahoma at 405/525-5325 or email preservationok@preservationok.org, or visit www.preservationok.org.

Archaeological Investigation at Herndon Site

By Meeks Etchieson, Ouachita National Forest

Due to a large land exchange between the Ouachita National Forest and Weyerhaeuser Company, several archeological sites in southeastern Oklahoma were tested for their eligibility for inclusion in the National Register of Historic Places between 1996 and 2003. One of these was the Herndon site, 34MC576, a historic Choctaw farmstead. During the testing of the site, the investigators determined that this property was occupied in the early 19th century, shortly after removal.

After the Revolutionary War, the Choctaw people accepted the new American government in the late 1700s. Following a series of treaties in the early 1800s, the Choctaw were removed from their Mississippi homelands to Indian Territory beginning in 1831 and concluding in the early 1840s. More than 15,000 people were removed from Mississippi while slightly more than 1,000 Choctaw stayed behind. Upon their arrival in Oklahoma, people built new farmsteads and the Herndon site represents one of these earlier Choctaw sites.

Three surface features (a depression containing mid-20th century trash, interpreted as a collapsed well; a small shallow rectangular depression or a cellar; and, a second shallow depression) were identified. A house or other outbuildings could not be determined from surface observations. The mid-20th century trash found in and around the well depression represented a single episode dating to the late 1950s or early 1960s based on a license plate and soda bottle.

Testing was accomplished through the use of the Forest Service Passport in Time (PIT) program, the Oklahoma Anthropological Society's Spring Dig, and a University of Newcastle Upon Tyne archeological field school. PIT is a Forest Service program designed to provide volunteers from across the country an opportunity to work on archeological or historic preservation projects on National Forests and Grasslands. Without these volunteers and students, this work would not be possible.

Cultural deposits extended to at least 60 cm (24 inches) below ground surface. In addition to the historic items, chipped stone, burned rock and dart points were also recovered. The historic artifacts included an abundance of native-made pottery sherds, numerous English-made and imported transfer print and hand painted ceramic shards, eating utensils, cut nails, and glass beads. A few tiny slivers of silver scrap suggested one of the occupants at this site was a silversmith.

Specific structures were not identified for the farmstead, but test units exposed several important features. The cellar and other two features may have sub-floor pits that were later filled with trash. The cellar contained less variety of artifacts than the other two. Included were a single blade axe, bottle glass fragments, and English ceramics, including a few shards of the Ruins pattern made by Davenport of Staffordshire, England. The two other features also included glass and English ceramics as well as glass beads, eating utensils, native-made ceramics, and the silver scrap. Burned rock and stone tool manufacturing debris occurred in all subsurface contexts. Other features identified were smudge pits used in the smoking and processing of animal hides. Two clay daub features consisted of a large irregular lump of burned clay and a series of irregular lumps of burned clay oriented in a roughly, linear direction. The clay of this second feature was less well fired suggesting the upper end of a mudcat chimney, a common chimney type in southeast Oklahoma and southern Arkansas.

Utensils from the Herndon Site Photograph: Meeks Etchieson

Bone preservation was good within the midden and provides evidence of fowl, deer, and pig. Each was likely a source of food. Wild animals supplemented domestic fowl and pig (originally acquired from Europeans in the 18th century), which quickly became a staple among the Choctaw and other Southeastern tribes. Botanical evidence from the site indicated both corn and peaches were present.

Middens are present on both the northern and eastern edges of the main site area. These are full of burned rock, lithic debris, bone scrap, glass, ceramics (both native-made and imported English wares), and miscellaneous metal items (including cut nails).

The extensive use of Choctaw-made ceramics suggests the possibility that the family that occupied this farmstead may have maintained indigenous beliefs. The bead working and silversmithing activities may also support this view. Datable artifacts from the site, largely English ceramics, suggest an occupation beginning in the mid-1830s and lasting for 15-20 years. English ceramics were likely imported through the Henderson and Gaines Importers company located in New Orleans, though no shards with this Importers' marks were found at Herndon. During this same time period, ceramics were being imported through this company into the historic towns of Doakville in Choctaw County, Oklahoma, and Washington in Hempstead County, Arkansas.

Native made pottery from Herndon is currently on loan to the Choctaw Nation from the Forest Service. The range and variation in decoration and materials on the ceramics in the collection provide an opportunity for today's potters to study removal period ceramics utilized by their ancestors.
